“The problem with the Washingtonian, Western offers to end the conflict”

Pay wall : THE MAIN problem with all the above concepts coming out of the Washingtonian and Western European laundromat is that they sideline the most important strategic goal - Israel's victory (The Jerusalem Post, Opinion)

Excerpt:

Alas, the world seems hell-bent on emasculating Israel, preventing Israel from achieving its necessary and justified war goals of crushing Hamas and restoring Israel’s regional deterrent power. The emasculation begins with small matters like insisting that Israel’s “primary goal” must be the provision of humanitarian aid to an enemy population in wartime, which is an absurdity never broached before in military history. It continues further with American attempts to micromanage IDF operations, neighborhood by neighborhood, house-by-house, bullet-by-bullet; handcuffing Israel and driving it, God forbid, into another disastrous draw against Hamas.

L’UE assiste, impuissante, à l’anéantissement de l’enclave palestinienne (Le Monde)

Excerpt:

Au fil des mois, les Etats européens se sont divisés essentiellement en deux camps. En premier lieu, les pays qui s’affichent « aux côtés d’Israël » et « soutiennent sans sourciller sa campagne militaire et évitent les critiques contre ses actions à Gaza, même après la multiplication des victimes civiles palestiniennes. La République tchèque, l’Autriche et la Hongrie se distinguent dans ce camp, suivies par l’Allemagne », constate Martin Konecny, de l’ONG European Middle East Project, installée à Bruxelles. A l’autre bout du spectre, on trouve des gouvernements qui se proclament « du côté de la paix » et qui, tout en condamnant fermement le Hamas, appellent à un cessez-le-feu et critiquent Israël pour avoir violé le droit humanitaire international. La Belgique, l’Espagne ou l’Irlande sont les membres les plus engagés de ce « camp de la paix », suivies par la France, qui cherche un équilibre entre soutien à Israël et contact avec les capitales arabes. (...) A en croire Zaki Laïdi, conseiller spécial de Josep Borrell, le chef de la diplomatie européenne, ces différences sont ancrées dans l'histoire de chaque pays, et donc difficiles à dépasser. « On ne peut comprendre la position de l'Allemagne vis-à-vis d'Israël sans prendre en compte le poids de l'Holocauste, dit-il. En Irlande, il existe au contraire une profonde identification avec la cause palestinienne, enracinée dans l'histoire d'émancipation du pays vis-à-vis de la couronne britannique. »

Pay wall : The fog of war may be thick, but some figures are solid (The Economist)

Excerpt:

In other words, while not all entries on the named list are complete, there is good reason to believe those on it are dead. That would mean, as of April 30th, that at least 24,686 Palestinians had died during the war—of whom at least 13,816 were women, children or old people—around 70% of the total that the moh says have died. Even Israel has indicated it expects the true death toll to be higher than the moh list would imply. The idf claims to have killed 14,000 militants, but the list contains fewer than 10,000 working-age men. In March the prime minister, Binyamin Netanyahu, said that up to 32,500 people may have been killed in Gaza, and that up to 60% of them were civilians. Whatever the true figure, the loss of life has been immense.

Les attaques du Hamas ont révélé le lien entre le David palestinien et le Goliath arabo-islamique. Sans l'appui militaire et logistique de l'Iran, une telle opération n'aurait pas été possible. Même avec une armée puissante et des services de renseignements performants, Israël est vulnérable. (...)

Un traitement qui, selon lui, exclut toute responsabilité israélienne dans le conflit (Le Monde, Interview)

Excerpt: « La grande majorité de la population juive israélienne ne voit pas ou ne veut pas voir la souffrance des Gazaouis. A l'extrême droite, au fond, on s'en félicite, et certains groupes essaient d'empêcher les camions d'aide humanitaire d'entrer dans la bande de Gaza. Même des gens qui se disent de gauche, favorables à la paix, admettent qu'ils n'éprouvent que peu ou pas d'empathie. La population reste bloquée sur ce qui s'est passé le 7 octobre 2023, où un cap dans l'horreur a été franchi. L'écho de la Shoah est puissant. Les Israéliens demeurent persuadés que le pays est parti en guerre car « on n'avait pas le choix ». Ils savent que cette souffrance existe, mais, au fond, la responsabilité palestinienne est toujours mise en avant. C'est une vieille affaire, bien exprimée dans une citation célèbre de Golda Meir [première ministre de 1969 à 1974] : « Nous ne pouvons pas pardonner aux Palestiniens de nous forcer à tuer leurs enfants », très reprise aujourd'hui. »

Kann er sie vor dem Untergang retten? - Der langjährige Politbürochef hat die Hamas geprägt wie kein Zweiter. Doch jetzt steht die Bewegung in Gaza mit dem Rücken zur Wand. Hat sie noch eine Zukunft? Ein Besuch beim Exilführer in Katar (NZZ)

Excerpt: "Since October 7, he has met virtually no journalists, let alone Western journalists. After weeks of waiting, an exclusive meeting is finally arranged. We drive through the night-time streets of Doha, the capital of Qatar, in an off-road vehicle. Then a heavy metal gate opens in front of a modest villa. Security guards take the visitors' cell phones. Mashal is coming soon, they say, "He's still praying." (...) A few minutes later, the Hamas leader arrives in a brightly lit room full of upholstered furniture. He is wearing a pinstripe suit, his beard gleaming silver. He presents himself as both statesmanlike and tough, allowing contradiction but also being firm. He makes one thing clear straight away: the terrorist attack on October 7, which caused so much death and destruction not only in Israel but also in Gaza, was absolutely justified in his view. (...) "October 7 is an important round in the fight against the occupation," he says - as if the attack on the army bases and kibbutzim in southern Israel was a spontaneous popular uprising and not a commando operation planned in secret by Hamas. "It showed that the Palestinian people are no longer willing to accept the occupation and are determined to shake it off."

Israel's narrow path out of the hellscape of Gaza

Pay wall : At a moment of military might, Israel looks deeply vulnerable - America should help it find a better strategy (The Economist, Leader)

Excerpts: "There is still a narrow path out of the hellscape of Gaza. A temporary ceasefire and hostage release could cause a change of Israel's government; the rump of Hamas fighters in south Gaza could be contained or fade away; and from the rubble, talks on a two-state solution could begin, underwritten by America and its Gulf allies. It is just as likely, however, that ceasefire talks will fail. That could leave Israel locked in the bleakest trajectory of its 75-year existence, featuring endless occupation, hard-right politics and isolation. Today many Israelis are in denial about this, but a political reckoning will come eventually. It will determine not only the fate of Palestinians, but also whether Israel thrives in the next 75 years. (...) Many mainstream Israelis are deluding themselves, too. They believe the unique threats to Israel justify its ruthlessness and that the war has helped restore deterrence. Gaza shows that if you murder Israelis, destruction beckons. Many see no partner for peace—the pa is rotten and polls say 93% of Palestinians deny Hamas's atrocities even took place. Occupation is the least-bad option, they conclude. (...) This seductive story is a manifesto for disaster. Consider defence. The damage to Israel's reputation could make it harder to fight on in Gaza. The long-term threat is from Iran and its proxies, including Hizbullah. Deterring this requires a military partnership with America that needs bipartisan backing, and ideally Gulf Arab support, too. (...) Israelis are right that they have no partner for peace today, but they are best placed to break the cycle. (...) America must help Israel avoid that fate—and if it fails it will itself pay a heavy diplomatic price. Best would be a temporary ceasefire, opening a route to two-state talks. Without this, American policy will need resetting. Mr Biden's early embrace has failed, but so would coercion. If America tried to force Israel out of Gaza while Hamas could still regroup, or curbed military support, or withdrew its support at the un, Israel's security could be in jeopardy. (...) The good news is that there are grounds for hope. Polls suggest that centrists in Israel command perhaps 50-60% of votes, institutions like the Supreme Court are still strong and better leaders exist. A struggle for Israel's future awaits. The battle in Gaza is just the start."

Some free articles / week : A threat to the pro-Israel consensus: "This may be an inflection point in US-Israel relations, a time when one of the last consensus issues in American politics succumbs to the era's bitter divisions." (The Jerusalem Post, Opinion)

Excerpt: "Biden sees a looming humanitarian catastrophe and wants Israel to begin thinking about the "day after," which in the view of the Americans, Europeans and Arab states is the eventual establishment of a Palestinian state of Gaza and the West Bank. (...) Netanyahu adamantly rejects any semblance of Palestinian sovereignty – and at this point in the war so do most Israelis. (...) For Biden, his support for Israel since October 7 has created deep rifts in his party and political observers warn that it could cost him the election. Biden is under intense pressure from many inside his own base: progressives, Arabs, Muslims, other minorities and young voters sympathetic to the Palestinian cause. Many voted "uncommitted" in Democratic primaries and have otherwise expressed opposition to his support for Israel as a warning. (...) Excerpt:

«La pression internationale pousse à un cessez-le-feu [...], le problème des otages va devenir plus aigu» , concluez-vous le 3 janvier, en terminant l'ouvrage. Comment imaginez-vous la fin de cette guerre ?

« L'opération terrestre est plus lente que ce que j'estimais. Elle est sans doute plus efficace contre le Hamas que l'opération «Bordure protectrice» de 2014. Les coups portés au Hamas sont rudes et les pertes israéliennes sont celles qui étaient anticipées. L'opération ne s'arrêtera pas là. Les Israéliens ont conquis environ 60% de la Bande de Gaza. Si un cessez-le-feu devient définitif, le Hamas ne sera pas détruit, ce serait donc une victoire de l'organisation armée. Israël voudra, au moins, conquérir la totalité du territoire et libérer les otages.

D'ailleurs, plus l'opération avance, plus la question des otages devient délicate. Elle est l'assurance-vie des dirigeants du Hamas. Tant qu'ils ont cette carte en main, ils peuvent freiner les engagements israéliens. Désormais, un cessez-le-feu assez long en échange des otages pourrait se mettre en place. Mais ces libérations d'otages ne se font qu'en échange du relâchement de prisonniers palestiniens, ce qui accroît la popularité du Hamas. Les perspectives sont très sombres. Pas seulement à court terme, mais aussi à bien plus long terme... »

Being queer in Gaza... 🤔

Some free articles / week: 'Queer in Gaza' campaign aims to raise awareness about Hamas LGBTQ+ persecution: "Living as a Queer person in Gaza is punishable by torture and death by Hamas, the rulers of Gaza" the campaign notes (The Jerusalem Post)

Excerpt: Israel is widely considered the only country in the Middle East where LGBTQ+ people can live without repression. “As a Queer Palestinian, I fled to Israel for protection,” said Abdul, who was kidnapped and tortured by Hamas for being gay, according to “Queer in Gaza.” (...) Gigi Pour, an Iranian-American refugee and LGBTQ+ rights advocate living in the US, told the Post that “The stories are very similar to atrocities committed against LGBTQ+ [people] in Iran. In most cases, the worst maltreatment comes from family members and siblings followed by the vigilantism by others who know homosexuality is punishable by death which leads to victimization and violence against LGBTQ with significant threats to their safety and well-being.”

The real problem with UNRWA is not what you might have been thinking

Pay wall: The case against UNRWA. The real problem with the UN’s agency for Palestinians: It has perpetuated the misery of Palestinians (The Economist)

Excerpt:

Around the world, displaced people are the responsibility of the un High Commissioner for Refugees (unhcr). Only the 6m Palestinian refugees scattered across the Middle East have a separate dedicated caretaker. Before the war perhaps a few tens of thousands were refugees in the literal sense: people forced to flee a conflict. The rest are their descendants, by now three or four generations of them. Most Palestinian refugees, in other words, are not displaced. - This is the core of Israel’s case against unrwa: that its definition of “refugee” is too expansive, without parallel, and nurtures false hope that all Palestinians will return. (...) It holds a grain of truth, too. The unhcr does not only care for refugees. It also has a mandate to seek “durable solutions”, such as integrating them into host countries that offer refugees citizenship. Yet unrwa can only provide aid. - This is a problem—but not one of unrwa’s making. Blame instead the Arab states that have refused, for decades, to offer citizenship to the Palestinians in their midst. The 1.7m registered refugees in Gaza (or their ancestors) lived under Egyptian control for almost two decades until 1967. Instead of offering them rights, Egypt left them in squalor. (...)
